This report builds on the efforts of many others. Chung Min Lee led a team of RAND researchers in compiling the questionnaire for the initial survey in September 1996. Samuel Popkin of the University of California, San Diego (UCSD), played a major role in this effort by sharpening the questions on this initial survey and providing overall polling expertise. The support and efforts of Rachel Swanger, Acting Director of RAND’s Center for Asia-Pacific Policy (CAPP), were critical to the successful implementation of both surveys.

On the Korean side, Kwon Young Bin, Director of the Institute for Unification and Cultural Affairs at the Joong-Ang Ilbo, and his talented staff, especially Kim Sung-Jin, Kim June Balm, Yoo Young Ku, and Kim Haeng, provided indispensable guidance and support in preparing and administering the surveys. This project would not have been possible without their assistance.

I am particularly grateful to Yong-Sup Han, straddling the Korean and American sides, who participated in preparing the updated questionnaire, provided helpful comments on both my preliminary analysis of the survey results and initial draft of this report, and facilitated interactions with the Korean team in Seoul. His thoughtful remarks in the Foreword of this report are indicative of his many contributions to this project.

I also want to express my grateful appreciation to the Korea Foundation, whose generous support and consideration made this project possible.

While indebted to many, I alone am responsible for any errors of fact or interpretation.
