This report documents the results of a project entitled “Improving Ground Force Performance in Future Coalitions.” The project aimed to improve the Army’s planning of its activities designed to enhance the operational performance of ground forces in coalition operations across the spectrum of missions.

The research reported here was sponsored by the Military Deputy to the Deputy Under Secretary of the Army for International Affairs (DUSA-IA) and was conducted in RAND Arroyo Center’s Strategy, Doctrine, and Resources Program. The Arroyo Center is a federally funded research and development center sponsored by the United States Army.

The report should be of interest and use to those concerned with the international activities of the Army and specifically with ways of enhancing its compatibility with potential ground force coalition partners. The report has most relevance to the Army, but it should also be of use to CINCs and the Joint Staff.
