ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book reflects extensive discussions with policymakers and unofficial observers in Greece, Europe, the United States, and elsewhere. The authors are most grateful to all who shared their time, views, and expertise. We wish to thank RAND colleagues David Gompert, Jeffrey Isaacson, Stuart Johnson, Edward Harshberger, Patricia Clark, Barbara Kliszewski, Phyllis Gilmore, Michele Guemes, Rosalie Heacock, and Shirley Birch for their assistance and advice. Thanos Veremis of the Hellenic Foundation for European and Foreign Policy and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy and Philip Gordon of the Brookings Institution provided very thoughtful reviews of our draft report.

Niki Tzavella, Chryssostomos Sfatos, and Thanassis Zesimopoulos of the Kokkalis Foundation in Athens and Dimitris Kerdies, Elaine Papoulas, and Alex Galinos of the Kokkalis Program on Southeastern and East-Central Europe, John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, were instrumental in supporting this research on a substantive basis and in facilitating meetings and roundtables in Athens and Washington. They also organized a successful review conference at the end of the study. We would also like to extend particular thanks to Ambassador Nicholas Burns and his staff at the U.S. Embassy in Athens, Ambassador Alexander Philon of the Greek Embassy in Washington, and Alexis Papahelas and Ekavi Athanasopoulou for their assistance and contributions over the course of our analysis. Any errors or omissions are, of course, the responsibility of the authors.
The book is dedicated to the memory of Spiros Philippas, who as Greek and Academic Affairs Liaison Officer on the NATO International Staff suggested this study and played a crucial role in making it possible.
