Acknowledgments

The authors wish to thank the staff of the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (Military Personnel Policy) for their support, particularly Mr. Nicolai Timenes, Colonel Kenneth Deutsch, Colonel Thomas Page, and Lieutenant Colonel Toreaser Steele. Additionally, many officers and civilians in all of the U.S. military departments and in foreign militaries helped us to understand how officer careers are now managed and how the future is being approached. Others aided us in our research, and, at risk of overlooking some, we particularly want to thank Colonel Richard Strand; Colonel Pat Toffler; Colonel Joseph Greenlee; Dr. Andrew Richter; Wing Commander R. G. Cumming, RAF; and RAND colleague James Dewar. As part of our research, we hosted a seminar of senior people from diverse backgrounds but with experience in military affairs and military career management. We are indebted to this group for their insights.

We are aware that the views expressed in this report will not be supported by all service personnel managers. These are our views and do not represent the policy of the Department of Defense or the individual military departments.