The authors are grateful for the guidance and assistance of several analysts at TRAC and TRADOC. We especially acknowledge the assistance provided by COL Steve Kirin, Director of Studies and Analysis at TRAC. COL Kirin served as the head of the Winter Wargame analysis team and in that capacity reviewed the strategic issues and made helpful suggestions. During the game, Peggy Fratzel and Mike Ingram kept the Arroyo Center team informed of the operational issues being developed by the TRAC analysis team. COL Robert Killebrew offered helpful guidance during the early briefings on the Arroyo Center’s strategic objectives and later by reviewing the briefing of these issues to the TRADOC DCSDOC. COL Mike Matthies provided valuable administrative support. COL Mike Starry was the source of information on the AAN Battle Force concept. Jerry Sollinger reconstructed the document from the authors’ fragmented thoughts and added coherence and continuity to the final product. The heroic task of collecting information from the various player and assessment cells and the development of the strategic issues fell to 12 RAND analysts, each selected for his long experience in gaming, simulations, and exercises: Richard Darilek, Scot Eisenhard, Dan Fox, Tom Herbert, Bob Howe, Roger Molander, Bruce Pirnie, John Schrader, Bill Schwabe, Randall Steeb, Marten van Heuven, and Peter Wilson. Finally, we wish to thank RAND colleagues Paul Davis and Lynn Davis for their thoughtful reviews of the draft.
